As I opened the door after a morning of shopping at the supermarket my little six-year-old daughter met me with a smile. "I've been helping you," she said.

"That's very sweet of you, dear. What have you been doing?" I asked.

"I picked all the postage stamps in your desk drawer, so they'll be ready for you when you want to mail some letters!"
Mrs. S. S., Pittsburgh, Pa.

"The only things that wear out faster than shoes," says Pete Henri of Montreal, Canada, "are Mom, Pop, and teacher."

• • •

"Know the difference between a jailer and a jeweler? One watches cells, and other sells watches!"
Susan Ramirez, Ventura, Calif.

As a counselor this past summer, I thought it would be a feather in my cap if I could break one of my little campers of his habit of thumb-sucking before his parents fetched him. I tried psychology. "Does your thumb taste good, Freddy?" I asked.

"No, it doesn't," he replied.

"Is it good to chew on?"

"No, it tastes terrible when it's dirty."

"Then what is good about sucking your thumb?" I persisted.

Little Freddy's brow furrowed. "Well, it's non-fattening!"
C. M.

A: "What do ghosts eat for dinner?"

B: "Spook-ghetti!"
Regina Miller, Detroit, Mich.

"You must be pretty strong to pull out such a big weed from your garden," I said to my neighbor's little daughter, Alice.

"Yes, it was very hard to do," she answered. "Don't forget the whole world was pulling on the other side!"
Leon Foster, Bangor, Me.

"Can you read and write?" asked the sheriff of the hobo he'd pulled in and was now getting ready to book.

"Can write, all right, but can't read," said the vagrant.

"Okay, then write your name on this page."

The bobo scribbled across the page. "What's that you wrote?" asked the puzzled sheriff, staring at the illegible scrawl.

"I don't know. I told you, I can't read!"
Daniel Colvige, Des Moines, Ia.

"I grew up to be the kind of a kid Jack Phar once observed my mother didn't want me to play with."

Mother and I were just about to leave for the movies, entrusting the care of our brood of five children to a new baby-sitter when the wide-eyed, slightly terrified girl scurried after us, clutching a slip of paper in her hand. "Please, please," she cried. "It's my telephone number where my parents can be reached in case anything happens to me!"
B. B. R., Long Beach, Calif.

MARY: "What do you get when you cross a mink with a kangaroo?"

CARY: "A mink coat with pockets!"
Greta Jeffery, Savannah, Ga.

"What would you like, a little brother or sister?" I asked the eight-year-old who had accompanied his parents to the hospital prior to the birth of a new baby.

"Well, if it's all the same to everybody concerned," was his prompt reply, "I'd rather have a pony!"
Dr. C. H. S., Birmingham, Ala.
